

PROS

- very clean and sleek design. Im very much a fan of how it looks. I would be open to sampling other color schemes and designs just to see how they look
- Holdings section including how much you personally invested into each of those stocks. Love seeing the return right under there as well
- im a big fan of the adding new stock tab. Very clean and erases the need for screenshots and hassle with transferring from your portfolio to this service
- i love the scores+portfolio average along. I am a massive fan of the visual filled in circle portion way you expressed the scores
- i like the top graph you have where it has your total expressed visually. Its a component that every investing tool needs to have

CONS

- i'm not a fan of the "Bought at vs. now" section. I don't like how its worded, and i also don't think a bar graph is useful here. I would much rather see a cleaner title and a linear graph trend with some sort of color scheme/visual ticker/mark along the curve to show where you got it vs. where its at now.
- How are we actually rating these stocks? What do the evaluations mean and represent
- i like the podcast element, but not the "make me a podcast part"

MY RECCOMENDATIONS

- also figure out a way to accomodate for when you buy the same stock at different times at different prices
- Implement "trefis estimate" for stocks somehow, but make it clearer and easier to access.
- personally, i would like to replace the "past podcasts" portion with a "Anaylsis Report" or something like that section where podcasts narrating an official customized report of that stock are created. Not every stock is going to have news all the time, so i think it would make sense for reports to be automaticall generated based on whats in the portfolio, and maybe out of 10 stocks you have, 3 of them have reportworthy news.
- i know you said that its not possible to tell people to buy, sell, or hold stocks or even do any predictions/projections whatsoever, but maybe at the end of each podcast, you could finish it off with drawing information somehow from financial advisory websites or what the experts are saying, and utilize their predictions to explain "what the experts" are saying about the stock. You aren't predicting anything, you would just be relaying information already out there.
- I also want to see some sort of implementation into this somehow where it maybe ranks/tiers your stocks as "best value" vs. "worst value" or something like that. The point of this whole service is to help mid-tier investors re-allocate their portfolio into something a little better than where they are currently at. Maybe play around with actually better displaying/showing/indirectly showing choices/options that investors could make to clean up their portfolio for the long run.

IDEAS

-maybe would be cool for a tiny feature to be implemented where when you are on the stock/graph, it could show how much you could have in that stock if it stays on its current trajectory 1,2,or even 3+ years down the line.

-would also be cool if maybe when you click on the specific stock, it has some sort of subtle box where it either says like "Long term", "short term" or other shit like that describing the kind of stock that it is